The Kissing Booth 3

Films are like what real-life is in another dimension of the world, where we could mirror ourselves in the shoes of one of the cast members. The Kissing Booth 3 was directed by Vince Marcello and premiered on Netflix on August 11, 2021. It's a successful and top-selling American teen romantic comedy film. Given the fact that this film portrayed a complicated, reality-based story, it was a great one. It hits differently. It has given us the vibe of which wave we should choose to surf, just like what decision we should make for ourselves and for our loved ones in our lives.

The film picks up from the cliffhanger set by The Kissing Booth 2. Elle decides to keep her college decision on hold until she can and gets fully focused on cherishing the last summer in L.A. with her friends and family. She also picks up a summer job and starts working in a restaurant to earn some money for college fees. Elle postpones her college decision until she's able to and instead focuses on her summer in Los Angeles with her friends and family, also, she acquired a summer job to earn money for her college expenses.

Elle chose Harvard University to live in Boston with Noah, but her best friend, Lee, gets upset. Elle plans to make this summer the best it can be to comfort Lee by sticking to and completing their childhood "Beach Bucket List." Meanwhile, due to high operating costs, the Flynns are selling their 80-year-old beach house. Because Noah, Lee, and Elle couldn't agree on anything, they decided to throw a beach house party to cherish their beach house times. Then conflict comes knocking. Elle's father has a date named Linda, who she finds difficult to accept. Elle's lover, Marco, also showed there, creating conflicts between Elle and Noah. Elle was unable to manage her time as a result of all of this. Due to constant conflicts, Noah chose to break up with Elle, and it was later discovered that she had been accepted to Berkeley as well, but had chosen to stay close to him through Harvard. Then, Sara later reconsidered selling the beach house after Elle gave her a photo with a note. The three of them went to different universities. Elle kept in touch with Lee, but she didn't keep in touch with Noah. Rachel's relationship with Lee came to an end as well, leaving only Lee and Elle together.

The film taught us to choose ourselves. Elle tried to make everyone happy except herself. She wished they could spend their final summer at their beach house together, forgetting about her own happiness. In our efforts to make others happy, we sometimes lose sight of our own happiness. We admired Noah's decision to end their relationship despite the fact that she would be upset for the purpose of their own growth and realizations. "Sometimes loving each other just isn't enough," we agree; a no from someone is a yes to someone better; they made the right decision to split up, which led them to find themselves — to find who they truly are. Elle, like Lee and Noah, ended up going to the school she really wanted to attend and doing her desired course. The film portrays a chaotic chain of events involving Lee, Elle, and Noah. Elle is coming to terms with the fact that she'll never be able to make everyone in her life happy. Elle's inherent journey intersected her love story with Noah, Lee's growing distance from her, Marco's presence, and Chloe. In reality, not every relationship is intended to be perfect. Being in a relationship involves self-love as well. On the other hand, the film had an interesting plot about Elle's growth as a character, where she learned to focus on what she wanted for herself. Relationships are great, but Elle has chosen not to lose sight of her. For her, the most important relationship was with herself. She sought to figure things out on her own rather than relying on others, to make someone happy or for them to approve her decisions. There are some stories that aren't meant to end happily. It is sometimes used for a new beginning. relationship stereotyping. The rom-com cliché trilogy featured patriarchy as well. Yet fairly, though the character of their teen heroine, Joey King has sexual freedom, she didn't pay with humiliation, slut-shaming or emotional turmoil. Moreover, there's a part of the film where problems and great emotions obtrude

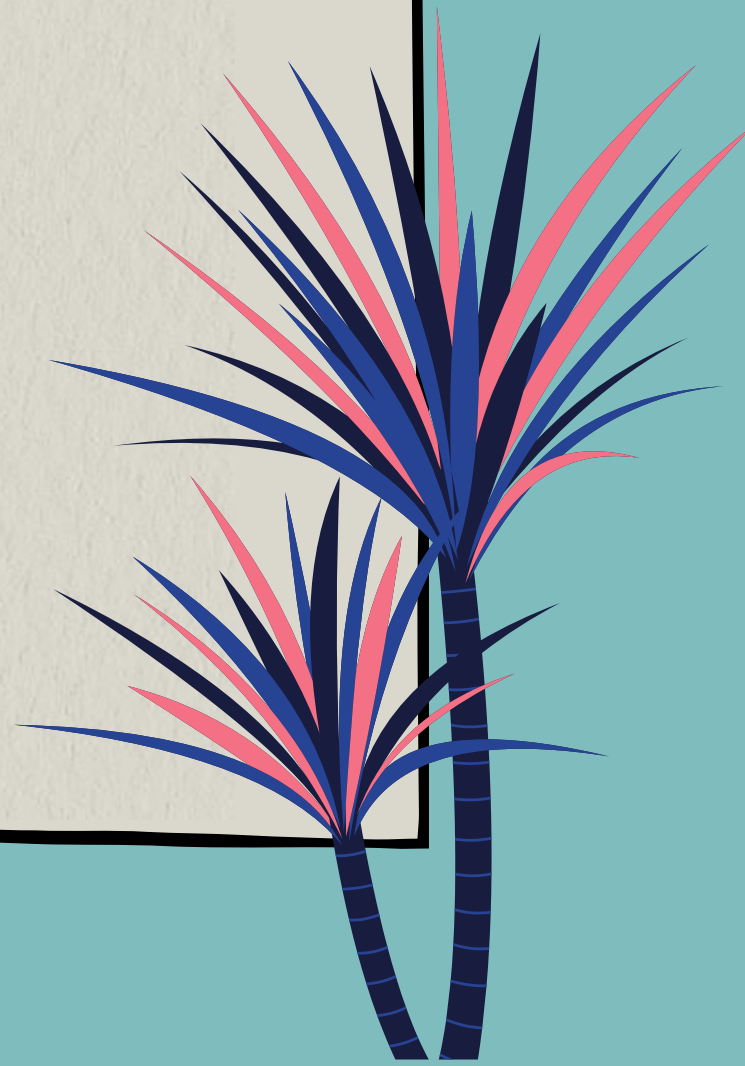

*I love writing poetry.
Poetry is all around me.
expressing my feelings with poetry,
causes me to be happy*

*I want to write
Something about suffering or love.
Poetry is a lovely hobby,

✦ You have courage to begin ✦

Each person has the fortitude to overcome adversity and recover from any situation. Life's been full of ups and downs lately, but it comes to think that it's part of life and makes us human. Battling anxiety for a while now hasn't been easy, but I'm grateful to God for giving me the courage to see every morning as a new opportunity. It's hard because the past seems to anchor me, but at some point, I dare to take the initiative and begin again. This path starts a new adventure of fearlessness to pursue my dreams. Sometimes the most significant act of faith is in leaving; however, this is not how my story will end. It takes courage to begin again, especially when we have the choice to rise above. I am not alone, even if I have to work by myself.
